We have developed a procedure to quantitate macrophage-mediated apoptosis in the living mouse by imaging cells with the phosphatidylserine (PS) binding probe annexin-V labeled with the photostable fluorophore Cy5.5. Paraffin-embedded tissues labeled with the same dye were analyzed by immunohistochemistry to confirm the sensitivity of annexin-V-Cy5.5 (A-Cy5.5) to PS on cells undergoing apoptosis. A-Cy5.5-labeled control staining for a ubiquitous protein, CD31, was used to distinguish apoptotic cells in control, immunized mice from macrophages recruited into a mammary adenocarcinoma tumor in tumor-bearing mice. A-Cy5.5 was administered by tail vein injection in normal and tumor-bearing mice, and tumor and spleen cells were imaged ex vivo at multiple time points to track the time course of cell death in vivo. A-Cy5.5 could be distinguished from autofluorescence by a concomitant fluorescence emission. Staining with A-Cy5.5 and antibodies specific for macrophages, T cells, or activated T cells in tumor-bearing mice demonstrated that macrophage-mediated apoptosis has a distinct cell phenotype: antigen-specific
